ABSTRACT

The research entitled "The Concept of Pro-Ship by Fictional Leaders in View of Aristotle's Virtue Ethics", is motivated by the existence of a moral problem in the concept of pro-ship carried out by fictional fans. Aristotle, in his thought, Nicomachean ethics is an ethical virtue based on traditional Greek virtues, namely self-control, courage, justice and responsibility. This study analyzes the moral problems in the pro-ship concept using Aristotle's ethical virtues.

This research is library research with factual historical methods. The research started with the collection of primary data and secondary data which were then classified based on the formal object of virtue ethics and the material object of the concept of pro-ship. This research is a philosophical research, so the analysis uses methodical elements of interpretation, induction & deduction, and holistic.

The results of this study are that there is a pro-ship moral problem that lies in the character and actions that are not in accordance with the ethical teachings of Aristotle's virtues. Based on the analysis of pro-ship actions, if examined based on the four principles of virtue, pro-ship is far from superior values and superior morals.
