ABSTRACT

The Peneleh area in Surabaya City is home to various historical relics that need to be preserved and maintained for their cultural heritage authenticity. However, many of these buildings are in a deteriorated state, with significant damage observed. This study aims to identify the forms of participation and collaboration among stakeholders in the revitalization efforts of the Peneleh tourist area, with the goal of enhancing its historical value while preserving the area's authenticity. A qualitative method with stakeholders analysis is employed to examine the participation and collaboration of stakeholders, including the government, local communities, academics, mass media, and financial institutions. The findings reveal that stakeholders participation in the revitalization of Peneleh encompasses contributions in the form of ideas, skills, labor, property, and financial resources. Furthermore, collaboration among stakeholders in idea development, decision-making, human resource development, implementation of revitalization, and preservation of revitalization outcomes plays a critical role in the successful revitalization of Peneleh. This study also highlights the importance of a holistic approach, encompassing physical, historical, and cultural aspects, in the efforts to preserve this historical heritage.
