This research was conducted in Purworejo Village, Bonang Sub-District, Demak Regency. The purposes of this research were to analyzed the reproductive, productive, and social roles of women in fishermen household, described about the decision making in the household, and the contribution of women in the fish processing's household economy. Field data collection was carried out from April to May 2021. Primary data was obtained from observation, structured interviews, in-depth interviews, and Focus Group Discussions (FGD) with 20 women processing fishery products. Secondary data were collected from village monograph and Central Bureau of Statistics of Demak Regency. The results showed that women were allocated more than 8 hours/day for reproductive roles such as taking care of family and educating children. For productive roles, they worked 4-5 hours/day and generated income from less than Rp1,000,000,- to Rp3,000,000,-/month. Beside this, they allocated 1-2 hours/week for public social activities such as attending recitations. The decision-making mechanism related to household matters were mostly determined by the wife, while for children's education and productive activities were determined jointly by the wife and husband. Decision making related to social roles were mostly determined by the husband.
